Financial Summary 19
This was a year of natural endings, auspicious beginnings and emerging opportunities to make a difference on issues we care about. After twelve successful years, the Bravewell Collaborative fulfilled its plan to sunset at the end of 2013 following a culminating leadership award celebration in New York. In the space of that time, eleven national leaders in the field of integrative medicine have been honored and awarded a total of $650,000 to support their transformative work.

Bravewell’s executive committee will continue to oversee the development of its two legacy initiatives, the yearlong Duke Leadership Program in Integrative Medicine and the BraveNet practice-based research network (PBRN). BraveNet is a collaboration among nine of the leading clinical centers that together are collecting outcomes data for integrative clinical care. This work is led by Jeffery Dusek, PhD, research director of the Penny George Institute for Health and Healing, and Donald Abrams, MD, of the Osher Center for Integrative Medicine at UCSF. The sun will finally set on Bravewell in June 2015, but no further investment is needed.

Auspicious beginnings in 2013 include major financial support for an initiative of the Institute of Medicine (IOM) led by outgoing President Harvey Fineberg to improve the health of all Americans. The Foundation is investing heavily in the planning stage of the decade-long effort, A Healthy America, to ensure that the conception of “health” used in this ambitious national communication strategy embraces the fundamental integrative principle that people are connected in mind, body and spirit with immense self-healing capacities.

Another important beginning was significant seed funding to create the Academy for Contemplative and Ethical Leadership. The Foundation encouraged the Mind and Life Institute to create a mindfulness-based ethical leadership program for emerging professionals and post-graduates following on the secular ethics curriculum developed for schoolchildren. This has been a major priority for His Holiness the Dalai Lama, and we are honored to play our part in expanding this important work. Our funding will support the creation of the program as well as its first few years of operation.

More will be said about this in the 2014 annual report, but toward the end of 2013 work began on an in-house initiative we are calling Catalyst. With the mission of making Minnesota the healthiest state in the union, Catalyst will bring together individuals and communities with healthcare institutions to build a culture of health and wellness in Minnesota. Its vision is to transform consciousness around health such that people recognize self-care is the true primary care, and to empower them with knowledge, skills and expanded opportunities around stress management and resilience, physical activity and sound nutrition. Efforts will center on strategic convenings to link the many promising health initiatives already going on, and equally strategic seed grants to build momentum in targeted ways. Our goal is to help people move “upstream” from primarily seeking disease care to focusing on individual opportunities to improve personal habits and practices to optimize health and wellbeing.

It has been a rich and fulfilling year for the Foundation, and we have worked hard to be thoughtful stewards of the inevitably limited resources available to make a difference in the most compelling issues of our time.

Sincerely,

Penny George, President
Our Mission

is to foster wholeness in mind, body, spirit and community by developing authentic leaders and supporting transformative programs serving the common good.

Our Guiding Philosophy is to invest in people, programs and initiatives that further the mission of the George Family Foundation and help build the communities in which we live.

We believe in sharing the blessings we have received and in celebrating the spiritual reciprocity that exists between donors and receivers working collaboratively to make the world a better place.

Our Focus Areas

The George Family Foundation funds transformational programs and initiatives in one or more of these focus areas:

Integrative Health & Healing
Promoting integrated approaches to health and healing is at our Foundation’s core. We seek to fund programs and initiatives that advance an integrated, patient-centered approach to healing, encouraging people to take responsibility for their health, supported by a diverse team of healthcare providers.

Spirituality
Enhancing the positive impact of religious faith and spiritual connection is important to the Foundation. We fund programs that contribute to interfaith harmony and that enrich the inner lives of individuals, families and communities.

Community
Giving back to the communities that nurtured our own family remains a Foundation value. Developing and sustaining vital community organizations ensures the livability of these communities; we actively foster their work. Creating community within and across funded programs is also a priority.

Leadership
Improving society through developing authentic leaders is a passion for our Foundation. Leaders exist in every part of an organization, regardless of individual responsibilities or titles. We support programs that are developing future leaders who are authentic, values-based and empowering of the leadership of others.

Total Integrative Health & Healing for 2013
$1,605,423

A Healthy America is developing one of the country’s largest public health information and marketing campaigns to date. Its mission is to create a continuous and enduring supply of innovative media that improves the health of Americans young and old. It is a collaboration between The Public Good Projects, an independent non-profit media organization, and the Institute of Medicine, part of the National Academy of Sciences and the world’s most respected independent voice on health-related matters.
Attending the whole patient, not just to a body part or a disease, is the underpinning of the Penny George Institute for Health and Healing. Studies show nearly 90 percent of health care depends on individual behaviors, society and genetic factors; ten percent on access to clinical care. In this reality, empowering individuals with the knowledge and skills to be self-responsible is the only thing which can ensure their optimal wellbeing.

Founded at Allina Health’s Abbott Northwestern Hospital, the Institute began with nursing care at the bedside and expanded to include a hospital-based clinic in 2005. In the last decade, it has grown into a clinical service line of Allina Health and the nation’s largest integrative health program embedded in a health system.

Today, the Institute provides integrative health services for Allina’s eleven hospitals and a variety of health and wellbeing outreach programs in the Twin Cities, greater Minnesota and Western Wisconsin. Allina plans to continue transforming health care with this patient-centered approach by increasing access to integrative medicine practices nearer patients’ homes, reducing anxiety and spurring better, faster recovery.

To meet the growing demand for this model of care, focused philanthropic support is critical. The Penny George Institute Foundation is the exciting outcome of this need.

Listening to donor concerns, Allina is streamlining the process to support Allina-wide services such as Courage Kenny Rehabilitation Institute and the Penny George Institute for Health and Healing. With leadership provided by Jan Malcolm, president of the Courage Kenny Foundation, Allina allocated general operating funds and staff to launch the Penny George Institute Foundation in late 2013.

Steve Bariteau, executive director of the Penny George Institute Foundation, helped us understand the need to build awareness of the new foundation. Particularly important is funding organizational development such as strategic planning, board development, marketing and communications. Because of our long-term support of the Penny George Institute for Health and Healing and wanting to encourage greater expansion of the service line and its benefits throughout Allina, the George Family Foundation authorized a grant of $100,000 to support the launch of the new foundation.

“These designated funds are crucial to getting the word out faster and better,” says Steve. “It will immediately put more tools in the hands of the people raising funds to bring the Penny George Institute’s healing practices to more people throughout Allina Health, speeding their recovery and making it possible for them to be healthier in mind, body and spirit.”

Total Authentic Leadership for 2013
$889,500
Each year our world grows smaller and our need for intercultural competence becomes more important to leaders, in business, nonprofits and education. For nearly 30 years, the Master of Arts in Organizational Leadership (MAOL) at St. Catherine University has been shaping leaders. These individuals influence their organizations to make ethical decisions that affect people of differing ages, races, religions, ethnicities and geographies. Transforming managers into effective, ethical, enduring leaders is the core of this program.

Recognizing the need to further develop its focus on leadership in an increasingly global and diverse world, the MAOL Program requested funding from the George Family Foundation in 2011 to assess, evaluate and make recommendations on the strengths and weaknesses of global capacity throughout the program. Listening deeply to the findings, program leaders applied the courageous decision-making skills they teach to improve their own work. Returning to the Foundation in 2012, MAOL requested a second grant to implement recommendations from the 2011 assessment. The result was significant increases in faculty and administrative cultural competency, curriculum changes and the development of a study-abroad program. By starting with investments in its faculty and curriculum, MAOL was able to implement sweeping changes in an efficient and effective manner over a short time span.

“Intercultural learning is very deep and very personal,” says Director Rebecca Hawthorne, PhD. “Engaging our teaching corps in this work through dedicated faculty development made a huge difference in our ability to implement the changes recommended in the 2011 program assessment.”

Through their MAOL work, students better understand their personal strengths and gain skills and knowledge related to what it means to lead. They are more prepared to engage the heart, mind and spirit of an organization – its people.

Employing our passion for leveraging resources and to encourage others to make annual contributions to MAOL, GFF required a 1:1 match from new or increased contributions to be fulfilled by the end of 2013. St. Catherine’s not only met the $25,000 match, but exceeded it. These matching funds make it possible to offer $1,000 scholarships for students to take advantage of MAOL’s new study-abroad program.

Through their MAOL work, students better understand their personal strengths and gain skills and knowledge related to what it means to lead. They are more prepared to engage the heart, mind and spirit of an organization – its people.

MAOL graduates Bryan Anderson and Katrina Volker discuss global leadership dilemmas in their Professional and Organizational Ethics course.

Convening discussions that change people’s thinking and their lives is the intent of On Being with Krista Tippett. Krista addresses difficult questions by engaging a range of people in deep conversations. She covers topics big and small, well-known and obscure. Importantly, these are conversations everyday people want and need to hear to stretch their minds and help them discover their inner selves and inner peace. These conversations nurture a more civil society.

It isn’t often a public media program is able to launch, grow and reinvent itself in less than 15 years, but that is the story of On Being with Krista Tippett. What began in 1999 as an occasional radio show of Minnesota Public Radio has grown into today’s leading public media program addressing the basic questions of meaning that pertain to the entire human experience. Its weekly programs, public conversations and educational materials are available on public radio stations across the U.S., streamed on the Internet and delivered by podcast with weekly audiences surpassing one million people.

In 2012, On Being boldly separated from American Public Media to become an independent media entity. The process resulted in the creation of a new cultural identity that provides flexibility and nurtures creativity to allow On Being to exceed well beyond its beginnings as a regional public radio program.

As an independent entity, On Being needed to build a new infrastructure; it particularly needed to build a solid funding base. 2013 funding from the George Family Foundation provided seed money to develop an individual fundraising program as well as to support general operating expenses. In collaboration with Krista and On Being’s Board of Directors, the Foundation created a 1:1 matching grant to leverage our grant and build individual support to continue into the future.

“Penny and Bill George saw the potential in this program right from the very beginning and have consistently supported us since 2000,” says Krista. “The questions asked by the Foundation propelled us to make decisions that ultimately enabled us to grow and become an independent organization.”

One listener describes the show’s lasting impact. “From Teilhard de Chardin through Brian Greene and the blog from a former Orthodox Christian to an Islam convert, this format reaches beyond spacious conversation. You touch souls more deeply than ever before. From a quiet corner overlooking the New England Coast, one listener sends you gratitude for moments that sustain.”

“Penny and Bill George saw the potential in this program right from the very beginning and have consistently supported us since 2000,” says Krista. “The questions asked by the Foundation propelled us to make decisions that ultimately enabled us to grow and become an independent organization.”

Total Community for 2013

$955,000
Fostering safe, positive school communities where students and educators thrive emotionally, socially and academically is even more important today than it was a quarter of a century ago when Youth Frontiers (YF) was founded.

Since 1987, YF has challenged more than 1.3 million youth across our country to live lives of good character. Its vision remains strong: change the way young people treat each other in the hallways, lunch lines and classrooms of every American school. YF prepares today’s young people to make tomorrow’s world better.

YF brings students day-long retreats on the values of kindness, courage, respect, responsibility and wisdom. Through music, powerful messages, games and small-groups facilitated by older student leaders, students learn how to stand up to bullies, treat others with respect and be leaders in their schools.

Three years of research by University of Minnesota’s Center for Applied Research and Educational Improvement, an internationally-recognized leader in educational research and evaluation, showed positive results. After the YF’s Respect Retreat, 16 percent more students reported their classmates resolve conflicts without fighting, insults or threats. One school administrator believes, “These retreats give schools a platform and a language to use with students when it comes to things like how they treat each other and how they behave at school.”

Recognizing YF’s attention to results and its focus on doing one significant thing extremely well, the George Family Foundation has granted YF modest operating support since 2003. We’ve continued this support for 10 years because of YF’s exemplary work increasing program quality and impact, managing growth and diversifying its revenue base.

Determined to address the critical middle school years and curb bullying and disrespect in St. Paul Public Schools, Superintendent Valeria Silva engaged with YF to help her students. This significant agreement with one of Minnesota’s largest and most diverse districts is a growth milestone. Contributions from individuals and foundations, including us, helped YF build infrastructure and organizational capacity, conduct research and seek focused opportunities for additional expansion.

“We transform young people’s hearts which makes a difference in how they treat each other,” says YF Founder and CEO Joe Cavanaugh. “Only by creating a generation of kids who treat each other with respect, compassion and empathy will we change the world for the better.”

A student sums it up. “I didn’t have friends. After the retreat, everyone is talking to me. Some want to be my friends. So, thank you, Youth Frontiers.”

Since 1987, YF has challenged more than 1.3 million youth across our country to live lives of good character. Its vision remains strong: change the way young people treat each other in the hallways, lunch lines and classrooms of every American school. YF prepares today’s young people to make tomorrow’s world better.
Healthy Communities Partnership

For almost two decades, Integrative Health and Healing has been a focus area for our Foundation. The Healthy Communities Partnership (HCP) launched an exciting community-generated health programming in 2013. Thanks to a $5 million, multi-year collaboration between the Foundation and our longtime partners, Allina Health and the Penny George Institute for Health and Healing, 13 local communities are working to foster greater awareness of individual wellness and community health resources.

The Penny George Institute believes that medicine can be transformed by providing outstanding patient-centered care through the use of integrative health practices and philosophies focusing on prevention and wellness, activation of the body’s natural healing capacity and development of self-care skills. Experience has taught us that greater health and healing can be achieved when people have a better understanding of what they can do to improve their own health and are supported in doing so.

HCP is a logical extension of the Penny George Institute’s work. The initiative encourages hospitals and local leaders in 13 Minnesota and Western Wisconsin pilot sites to develop and build awareness of health initiatives for local residents. These partnerships are informed by the integrative health philosophy and the distinctive interests and health priorities of each community. As HCP programming continues through 2015, the initiative intends to improve community health by:

- Enhancing and strengthening each local health care system’s role within the local community wellness infrastructure and networks;
- Improving community member wellness by conducting annual screenings and education;
- Developing strategies to sustain community health improvement efforts through changes in policy, practices and systems, and identifying resources to partner with community hospitals’ and clinics’ work.

Local activities have begun

Last year, local initiatives in HCP communities performed baseline screenings on more than 5,700 individuals. People participating at the local level used an interactive website, Family Health Manager, allowing HCP, medical professionals and residents to track the individuals’ progress. At the same time, local care systems hired program ambassadors and care guides to build and deepen relationships with individuals in their community and connect them to a wide variety of community resources. The local programs coordinated teams to design and implement larger-scale health promotion activities, sometimes even advocating for policy changes.

Ten of the sites began by looking at their own healthcare institution and developed programs, classes and screenings for their respective staffs. Eleven sites reached out to local employers offering different combinations of screening, education and coaching activities. Most sites are also planning community-wide efforts to raise residents’ awareness of and encourage their participation in healthy lifestyle options.

Formal evaluation is beginning

In 2013, our Foundation engaged Rainbow Research to independently evaluate local HCP programs. Rainbow Research’s evaluation team worked with the HCP sites, Allina Health’s research team, Penny George Institute project staff and our Foundation to define key questions and determine the best tools and approaches to measure progress of individuals’ health. The research will also help us better understand, over time, HCP’s influence on each community’s use of its health and wellness resources. Rainbow Research will use case studies, Social Network Analysis and Ripple Effect Mapping to track how the pilot communities share information and resources with each other. Also, the research will examine HCP’s impact on these communities over the initiative’s remaining two years.

Rainbow Research reports that HCP sites are, in general, off to a solid start in terms of initial screenings and program implementation. We learned important lessons during the first year of evaluation. These include:

• Engagement is key at all levels – from individuals to HCP partners, to the community-at-large – to position HCP for success.

• Messages and outreach strategies must be tailored to suit the unique needs of each community.

• Building on existing partnerships and collaborations prevents duplication and increases momentum around community health.

In the past year, people in our pilot communities became more aware of and increased use of the wide variety of community health and wellness resources available to them. They are also gaining better understanding of the power of being more engaged in their own wellness goals and practices.

Examples of local projects:

• Riverwood Healthcare’s “Zumba-thon” got people moving (Aitkin, Minn.);

• Grand Itasca Clinic and Hospital collaborated with Arrowhead Promotions to design the company’s first formal wellness program benefiting lower-income workers with health screenings, immediate coaching and referrals to free clinics (Grand Rapids, Minn.);

• Hutchinson Health, in partnership with the Southwest Initiative Foundation, plans to transform unused land into a community garden (Hutchinson, Minn.);

• River Falls Area Hospital conducted ergonomic assessments at local community work sites (River Falls, Wisc.).

Healthy Delano celebrated its inaugural year by participating in the community-wide St. Paul Saints Baseball Event in Delano (May 11, 2013). More than 40 kids and their families enjoyed a “Stretch with the Saints” pre-game activity (led by My Body Shop Fitness).

Ambitious Vail Resort employees and their families volunteered to plant 300 willow trees and 250 shrubs along the Eagle River. They also hand-built a new hiking and biking trail and celebrated the Duck Pond River Access conservation easement’s new permanent conversation status. We support the Trust’s general operations to ensure that the future of Eagle Valley in Colorado continues to include the scenic views, wildlife habitat and open ranch lands our family has long enjoyed.

Penny and Bill George with the 2013-2014 George Leadership Fellows at the fall Center for Public Leadership Fellows retreat at the home of Anne and David Gergen on Cape Cod. George fellows are selected from students in their final year of the Harvard Business School/Harvard Kennedy School joint degree program based on demonstrated interest in community and organizational transformation through public service, activism and social entrepreneurship, as well as a commitment to working in two of three designated areas—the public sector, private sector, and nonprofit sector—over the course of their careers. Special emphasis in the program is placed upon character development and ethical leadership.
“There are few things as satisfying as working strategically and collaboratively to bring about transformative change.”

– Penny and Bill George
