Financial Summary 26
It’s hard to believe that the George Family Foundation has existed for more than twenty years! When I recall Bill’s and my immediate decision to create a family foundation in 1994, I could never have imagined its future or the joy the work of philanthropy itself would bring.

My experience recovering from breast cancer in 1996 inspired our first significant, focused grant that created and funded the first Healing Coach position within the Virginia Piper Cancer Center at Abbott Northwestern Hospital. That single wellness-focused position has led to what is now known as the Penny George Institute for Health and Healing. The Penny George Institute is a clinical service line at Allina Health that serves as the engine for the system’s commitment to whole-person care.

Tectonic shifts in healthcare that were incipient in 1994 are now fully underway. In spite of the fact that the U.S. spends dramatically more on healthcare than any other developed nation while achieving inferior results, fee-for-service remains the dominant model for the delivery of care to patients, and aggressive, later-stage treatment is still largely the norm. Health systems yearn to deliver the care they know patients deserve, create the working conditions health professionals desire and address the needs of communities for greater health.

While change is moving irreversibly in the right direction, it is moving more slowly than we had hoped. We want to see our vision of healthcare transformed to deliver more health and wellbeing achieved in our lifetime. It is sometimes frustrating, however, to witness how slowly big systems change.

For these and other reasons the George Family Foundation created the Catalyst Initiative (see page 8 for a full report), a three-year, three-million-dollar grassroots initiative to foster the innate healing capacity of individuals and communities. In Catalyst’s second year, we saw more robust adoption of mind-body practices, especially in communities that have experienced high levels of trauma.

One of Catalyst’s activities this year was a day-long convening on building resilience and healing from trauma. It was an opportunity to experience culturally based healing practices and hear from national experts about the innate power of communities to generate healing.
INVESTING TO ADDRESS FUTURE NEEDS

We made no major changes in our grantmaking priorities but have sought to more clearly describe what we are interested in funding and why. There are now detailed guidelines available on our website that we hope will bring a higher level of understanding and transparency to our funding decisions.

As in past years, the George Family Foundation has invested more deeply in a handful of our grantee partners, to expedite their growth or to pilot an idea that we hope could be replicated or expanded in the future.

For example, we made a second $100,000 grant to expand Marnita’s Table, a small but powerful organization that seeks to bring people together across all varieties of human differences. It does this by implementing founder Marnita Schroedl’s concept of “intentional social interaction.”

People who are often excluded from important conversations that concern them are automatically included and valued in the problem-solving that happens at her tables. This year alone, Marnita’s Table hosted Intentional Social Interactions (IZIs) in 25 Minnesota communities that reached nearly 7,000 people. In addition, Marnita’s Table is helping teach others to lead their own tables through its in-person training supported by a web-based training and an IZI content platform. As our country seeks to take full advantage of the benefits of its increasing diversity, the ability of all of us to connect across our differences is ever more crucial.

A second, larger grant of $75,000 went to Second Harvest Heartland for its FOODRx pilot project. This innovative effort engages four Minnesota healthcare organizations in improving the nutritional status of people with diabetes who use food shelf services. FOODRx is an example of how community-based wellness and prevention programs are becoming increasingly central to, and, creative in solving some stubborn health issues, such as helping low-income people living with chronic illnesses improve their health (see page 23 for more about this program).

Growing distress among health professionals, including high levels of stress and suicide, prompted the National Academy of Medicine to request funding for a convening in 2018. This meeting will bring together the nation’s leading healthcare associations in the effort to improve the lives of those on the front lines of healthcare delivery. Our foundation has long advocated that self-care for health professionals is a central tenet of integrative medicine, so we are honored to co-sponsor this important gathering.

OUR COMMITMENT TO ONGOING PROGRAM AND OPERATING SUPPORT

We have heard time and again from our grantee partners that the general program and operating support we provide, while modest, is vital to their ability to provide consistent service to those individuals they seek to help. In 2016 we renewed this commitment by providing $1,493,450 in general program and operating support to 49 grantees.

LOOKING AHEAD TO 2017

2016 was a year of dramatic change for our country. What lies ahead is far from certain, which makes the task of responsible philanthropy all the more challenging. We know we must invest more deeply in those organizations whose missions are in peril and who advocate for those at greatest risk. We stand ready to co-fund projects and to help launch pilot programs that may not be guaranteed to succeed, but have both the promise and the strong leadership necessary to strengthen our country for everyone who lives here.

We are grateful to be able to do the work we do through the Foundation. We continue to hold as our lodestar our core principle of spiritual reciprocity – as we give, so we receive. This means we seek to partner with the leaders whose vision, ideas and heavy lifting are making our communities better places for us all to live and work.

Warmest regards,

Penny P. George, Board Chair
OUR MISSION

is to foster wholeness in mind, body, spirit and community by developing authentic leaders and supporting transformative programs serving the common good.

OUR GUIDING PHILOSOPHY

is to invest in people, programs and initiatives that further the mission of the George Family Foundation and help build the communities in which we live.

We believe in sharing the blessings we have received and in celebrating the spiritual reciprocity that exists between donors and receivers working collaboratively to make the world a better place.
OUR FOCUS AREAS

The George Family Foundation supports programs, organizations and initiatives that transform lives by working to change the systems affecting those lives.

COMMUNITY
We seek to give back to the communities that have nurtured our family and others by developing and sustaining vital non-profit organizations that ensure the livability of our cities. Creating connections within and across the programs we fund is also a priority. We look for programs and organizations that are making a difference in the Twin Cities, the Vail Valley and other communities connected to George Family Foundation board members.

INTEGRATIVE HEALTH & HEALING
A central focus of our Foundation is to transform the healthcare system by promoting integrative approaches to health and medicine. We seek to fund Minnesota-based organizations and select, transformative national programs and initiatives that advance an integrative, patient-centered approach to health and wellbeing.

AUTHENTIC LEADERSHIP
A core principle of our Foundation is to transform individuals into effective, ethical, enduring leaders. We support authentic leaders who influence organizations’ ethical decisions and affect people of differing ages, races, religions, ethnicities and geographies.

EMERGING FOCUS AREAS
We are in the process of creating goals and strategies within these emerging focus areas.

CATALYST INITIATIVE: CHANGE AT THE GRASSROOTS LEVEL

Past experiences influence our present and our future. When those experiences are negative, the impact can be devastating to the individual, their families, and often, their communities. Those who have help understanding the experiences learn to cope and grow from them. The Catalyst Initiative helps individuals, organizations and communities realize their capacity to support health and wellbeing using mind-body approaches that are culturally meaningful.

Catalyst partners with communities and organizations, bridging to new social norms and improving health outcomes. Working at the grassroots level, Catalyst strives to inspire change from within. Recognizing that people support what they help to create, Catalyst is intentionally building a culture of wellbeing from the ground up. One of those partners is the Irreducible Grace Foundation (IGF).

HOW ONE YOUNG WOMAN IS CHANGING HER LIFE

The impact of trauma and toxic stress during her most critical development years followed Sheila out of the foster care system. She reacted to childhood traumas with self-destructive behaviors – normal coping behaviors, too often not recognized as a physical and emotional response to trauma. Within three months of leaving the foster home, she was hospitalized twice for attempting suicide.

Fortunately, Sheila was connected with the Irreducible Grace Foundation, a St. Paul-based non-profit and Catalyst grantee partner. Through participation in IGF’s Fostering Wellbeing project, Sheila learned effective new ways to self-regulate her stress and to proactively recognize and react to the “fight/flight/freeze” responses.

Using new mind-body-spirit healing practices taught in the project has been a game changer for Sheila, now 15 years old. “I’m back at work and school, and doing better with the new tools I learned,” she said.
When young people like Sheila begin to understand how trauma has impacted their lives and learn healthy ways of coping with it, healing can begin. They also become influential change agents among their peers. Sheila and other young people in IGF’s Fostering Wellbeing project learn important lessons about how trauma and toxic stress can trigger sustained levels of stress hormones in their bodies, triggering fight, flight or freeze responses.

They learn how deep breathing, movement and guided imagery can calm the nervous system, nurture creative thinking, and put them in charge of their responses. Most of IGF’s program participants are youth of color who have experienced homelessness, been in out-of-home placement, and/or have been impacted by addiction, mental illness or generational poverty. As in Sheila’s case, these early adverse childhood experiences can lead to poor health and social/economic outcomes throughout life.

Young people served by Irreducible Grace are changing the dialogue and breaking that stereotype. They are setting out to be the architects of their futures by learning new skills, sharing them with other youth, and building their own leadership development along the way.

The next chapter of Sheila’s life is still being written. She has been invited to work with an organization in Greater Minnesota to help other traumatized and stressed youth. By modeling self-care practices and training others, Sheila is creating a brighter future for herself and her peers.

CATALYST IS BUILDING FUTURE LEADERS AS IT CHANGES PRESENT LIVES

Catalyst works with a variety of community organizations, providing seed grants, convenings, and expertise. Often its work leads to people and groups where multi-generational trauma has left physical and emotional scars. Once trained, young people and community leaders are well-positioned to model healthy ways of handling stress and healing trauma, shifting the narrative from a deficit-based story to one of empowerment. Investing in and building leadership in culturally authentic organizations has proven to be a very effective way of unleashing the energy that exists in community and tapping dormant energy passed down for generations.

Food insecurity is a significant problem in our country and Minnesota is no exception. An estimated 1 in 10 people in our state is food insecure. They are worried food will run out before they have money to buy more, they cannot afford a balanced meal and/or they regularly skip meals. The lack of access to fresh foods in many communities further challenges people who want a healthier diet.

At the same time, healthcare emphasizes healthy eating, especially for those with chronic illnesses like diabetes, heart disease, and hypertension.

The Foundation looked for ways to bridge this gap and found FOODRx. A pilot program, FOODRx links the services of one of the largest foodbank networks in the U.S. to major healthcare systems, including Hennepin County Medical Center (HCMC) and CentraCare, and their patients.
“Food is medicine,” says Robert Zeaske, president and CEO of Second Harvest Heartland. “Food is a critical element to overall health and wellbeing, and even more so if we have a chronic disease. In starting FOODRx, we believed if we could connect the healthcare system into our work, we could find a better way to help our clients with diabetes. If we could do this right, we could actually help change healthcare for the better.”
FOODRx connects low-income healthcare consumers with diabetes to healthy food, simultaneously reducing hunger and improving health outcomes. The concept of a practitioner “prescribing” an alternative or complement to medical interventions is growing in popularity; however, not enough programs have been successfully launched and evaluated to convince insurance companies to exchange or supplement a medication or procedure for a box of healthy food.

A phone call in the spring of 2015 introduced the George Family Foundation to FOODRx and led to an initial grant later in the year. We made a second grant in 2016. Our belief in the program, backed by grant funds, helped Second Harvest Heartland secure an additional $1,224,000 in support from other philanthropic entities.

Since the pilot program began, Second Harvest Heartland has received 2,522 total referrals in 2015 and 2016 (1,519 in 2016 alone). Of the people successfully contacted by FOODRx, 92 percent were able to connect with new sources of food. This included Second Harvest Heartland’s specially packaged food boxes, as well as state and national programs including SNAP, Meals on Wheels, etc. Physicians, impressed with the early outcomes, feel comfortable referring patients to Second Harvest Heartland, a trusted resource with a program that is working. Second Harvest Heartland’s ability to take the physician referral and contact the patient for the fulfillment part of the food “prescription” has been critical to the program’s success.

“Food is medicine,” says Robert Zeaske, president and CEO of Second Harvest Heartland. “Food is a critical element to overall health and wellbeing, and even more so if we have a chronic disease. In starting FOODRx, we believed if we could connect the healthcare system into our work, we could find a better way to help our diabetic clients. If we could do this right, we could actually help change healthcare for the better.”

While it’s too early to predict the broad implications of FOODRx, the prognosis is favorable. Programs like this one are critically important to having better patient outcomes while bringing down healthcare costs.

The George Family Foundation is pleased to be able to help Second Harvest Heartland continue this pilot project. In addition, we are grateful to the other funders who have joined us in this effort.
The George Family Foundation’s Challenge Grant matches gifts that support the National Parks Conservation Association’s (NPCA) work in the Midwest. NPCA connects student volunteers to national parks, converting them to advocates. George Leadership Fellows are third-year students pursuing a joint degree from Harvard Business School and Harvard Kennedy School. The George Fellows participate in an Outward Bound experience, playing multiple leadership roles to support each other while climbing a 62-foot Alpine Tower. They coached, they climbed, they encouraged, they belayed - literally holding someone else’s life in their hands.
The Building Resilience event on September 27, 2016 closed with all attendees participating in a moving Bantu Healing Drum Ceremony. This beautiful closing reaffirmed the innate capacity we all carry within us to heal from trauma, build resilience, and be well.
