For the past 23 years, the George Family Foundation has been working to transform clinical care and at the same time improve the health of the country by empowering individuals to be the central agents in their own health. Pursuing a pioneering vision and operating with a spirit of collaboration with like-minded individuals and organizations, we are gratified by the progress we are making. Thus, we have decided to accelerate our health care programs in several new ways as health and wellbeing shift into local communities.

In two decades, we have gone well beyond what we imagined at the outset in some areas, while progress has been slower in others. Within health care delivery, financial imperatives still favor procedures and disease care. Since value-based care payment is coming eventually, however, progress toward readiness for that day will continue as quickly as health care system balance sheets permit.

The overall trend line is positive: When we began this work, the whispered word “quackery” was still an effective way to slow the uptake of new therapies that enhanced healing. Today, the field of integrative medicine and health is well known, backed up by credible research and increasingly identified as the type of care people are seeking.

For all of the focus on federal health care legislation over the past two decades, I believe that the transformation of health care begins locally by shifting the focus from disease care to enabling people to live healthy lives. Advocates of integrative medicine and health look to the principles and practices of whole-person health care as a disruptive innovation, not a separate subspecialty. This philosophy of care places the individual at the center of the health care experience.

Our work is making a difference. With initiatives operating at four levels – national initiatives, major regional health care institutions, established community organizations and local community groups (see Diagram on page 27) – we feel confident we are contributing materially to the transformation of health care from a sole focus on disease to health and wellbeing.
On the national level, we are very proud of the impactful 12 years of the Bravewell Collaborative, which led to legitimizing integrative medicine as a credible field. Bravewell’s accomplishments include:

- Supporting the growth of the Academic Consortium for Integrative Medicine and Health from eight academic health centers and health systems to more than 70 institutions that now belong to this membership organization. The George Family Foundation continues to support the Consortium with convenings, grants and communications assistance.

- Sustaining the best models of clinical care across the country and creating the first practice-based research network in the field.

- Creating a leadership program to train the next generation of system leaders in integrative health care.

Here in Minnesota, we have supported the Allina Health system and its flagship hospital, Abbott Northwestern, in creating the Penny George Institute for Health and Healing. The focus of the Institute has been to lead the system in innovative therapies underlying whole-person care. From its early days as a nursing-based inpatient program, the Institute has expanded into a clinical service line that operates across the system’s 12 hospitals and 90 primary care clinics.

Also, this year Allina Health publicly announced its commitment to whole-person health as its “raison d’être.” In addition, we recently completed a four-year grant to the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota, to expand its integrative medicine offerings through the Dan Abraham Healthy Living Center.

While change in clinical care is inexorable, the greatest transformation will be when self-care becomes the true primary care. We envision health and wellbeing moving from the institutional setting into communities where people live, work and play, as practical, inexpensive, easily learned self-care practices become fully embedded and available.

In this regard, we are also immensely gratified that the YMCA of the Greater Twin Cities, with its 37 sites and its role as a national innovator, has chosen to partner with the George Family Foundation to pursue a vision that brings wellness and wellbeing into programs that serve its members through the new George Wellbeing Center at the downtown Minneapolis YMCA. Through its scholarship programs, the YMCA makes membership available to all people, regardless of income. This enables programs developed there to benefit all who need to access them, both at the Center and as its programs spread across the region.

“Advocates of integrative medicine and health look to the principles and practices of whole-person health care as a disruptive innovation, not a separate subspecialty. This philosophy of care places the individual at the center of the health care experience.”
The vision for the new George Wellbeing Center is to be a bridge from health care systems into the community. For example, people can learn about the latest science in prevention and recovery from chronic illness – and work toward optimizing their health – no matter where they are on the health-to-illness continuum.

Our fourth level of focus is the Catalyst Initiative, which we created three years ago to work with grassroots community groups to address the effects of trauma and toxic stress through culturally authentic self-care practices. The success of this initiative led us to transfer Catalyst to The Minneapolis Foundation, where it will have increased opportunities to grow. Our hope is that Catalyst will become a national strategy for increasing resilience. We salute Suzanne Koepplinger, who worked with us to create Catalyst and who has moved with it to The Minneapolis Foundation, for her visionary work and deep community partnerships.

Our progress over the past two decades is especially meaningful to me because this field, with its focus on wholeness in mind, body, spirit and community, weaves together the threads of my family history. My grandfathers were both progressive Protestant ministers, my father was a small-town general surgeon and I spent my career as a consulting psychologist. As I enter my 75th year, I see how all three can be blended to serve the cause of optimal wellbeing for individuals and society.

We are grateful to the visionary medical leaders whose efforts we are carrying on; to my philanthropic colleagues from the Bravewell Collaborative; and to those institutional leaders, from the YMCA to The Minneapolis Foundation, with whom we are partnering now to further integrative health and medicine.

While health is the largest focus of the George Family Foundation, we continue to support innovative programs in authentic leadership, advancing women and girls, the environment, youth development, spirituality and a wide range of local community organizations.

Bill and I wish to thank Gayle Ober and her colleagues Robin Barker and Katie Jedlicka Sieve, as well as our two sons, Jeff and Jon, who serve on the Foundation board. I admire their dedication to these initiatives.

I am truly blessed to work with such committed and talented people.

Warmest regards,

Penny P. George

OUR GUIDING PHILOSOPHY
is to invest in people, programs and initiatives that further the mission of the George Family Foundation and help build the communities in which we live.

We believe in sharing the blessings we have received and in celebrating the spiritual reciprocity that exists between donor and grantees working collaboratively to make the world a better place.

The George Family Foundation supports programs, organizations and initiatives that transform lives by changing the systems affecting those lives.

Our Focus Areas

Community
We seek to give back to the communities that have nurtured our family and others by developing and sustaining vital nonprofit organizations that ensure the livability of our cities. Creating connections within and across the programs we fund is also a priority. We look for programs and organizations that are making a difference in building community in the Twin Cities, the Vail Valley, and other communities connected to George Family Foundation Board members.

Integrative Health & Healing
A central focus of our Foundation is to support the growth of integrative approaches to health and medicine. We seek to fund Minnesota-based organizations and select, transformative national programs and initiatives that advance integrative, patient-centered approaches to health and wellbeing in our health care systems and help individuals to improve their own health and wellbeing through mind, body, spirit and community-based approaches.

Authentic Leadership
A goal of our Foundation is to develop authentic leaders who are people of the highest integrity, committed to building and transforming organizations, have a deep sense of genuine purpose and are true to their core values. These leaders will flourish in all sectors of society — business, nonprofit and public — with a special focus on leaders from diverse backgrounds.
Spirituality & Mindfulness

Our dream is that American society will one day be characterized by a culture of respect for all faiths and an appreciation of the importance of an inner life nurtured by spiritual practice, compassion and service beyond self. To this end, we support non-sectarian, interfaith and progressive religious organizations that develop authentic leaders who will strive to build a more civil and compassionate society and promote interfaith harmony, as well as a limited number of national programs that nurture mindfulness, spiritual and contemplative practices.

Environment

We would like all people to have a deep value and appreciation for nature and the environment and to work together to preserve natural spaces for the sake of human beings in both urban and rural areas. To cultivate this, our Foundation supports programs that provide individuals and families the opportunity to participate in outdoor experiences in our national parks and other public spaces in the communities that have nurtured our family.

Youth Development

Our Foundation believes that all youth should have opportunities to realize their full potential and have a positive impact on their families, community and society. To that end, we fund programs that engage with young people from disadvantaged backgrounds over a multi-year time period to develop life skills, build self-esteem and nurture overall wellbeing.

Catalyst Initiative: Preparing for the Future

In May, following the successful three-year incubation and innovation period, we were pleased to announce that the Catalyst Initiative would be moving to The Minneapolis Foundation in January 2018.

CONVENING TO MAKE A DIFFERENCE

Since 2014, Catalyst has hosted gatherings that have brought people into safe spaces to discuss and experience integrative health and healing practices and to build supportive networks. We have found that carefully selected nonprofit organizations can quickly develop and deliver meaningful integrative health and healing services to those who need it most. Best of all, we see that the movement is growing at the local level across Minnesota – even without direct involvement from us.

In 2017, we shared what we learned over the past three years and brought networking opportunities to 558 individuals representing nonprofits, grantmakers and policymakers. In addition, the Initiative offered small seed grants to 17 organizations, supported the training of 82 nonprofit leaders through the Center for Mind-Body Medicine, and participated in several local and national meetings that further expanded community understanding of the Initiative’s work.

At the Catalyst Seed Grantee Convening, attendees were invited to hand-draw their connections on the Living Facebook wall as they arrived. Throughout the gathering, they returned to the network map to add new connections and build the network focused on culturally authentic self-care and healing.

Catalyst community partners share their projects and expand networks at the Catalyst Seed Grantee Convening.

HOW FIVE HEALERS ARE CHANGING LIVES

Mind-Body Medicine in Indian Country:
Healing historic & personal trauma

Native elders Linda Eagle-Speaker and Donna LaChapelle of the Minnesota Indian Women’s Resource Center work with women and girls affected by personal and historic trauma. With the support of Catalyst, Linda and Donna became certified healers through the Center for Mind-Body Medicine. Since that time, they have spread their message of self-care throughout Indian Country, blending mind-body techniques with traditional healing practices. To date, their program has trained more than 1,000 individuals in eight of the eleven tribes in Minnesota and in every Native organization in the region.

One such individual is a northern Minnesotan, White Earth Reservation woman in her mid-twenties. She completed both the fundamental and the advanced training in mind-body medicine offered by the Center. The trainings took place during a difficult time for her. In a single year, her sister committed suicide, three more relatives died of drug overdoses and suicide, and she had a baby. But she persisted.

Against great odds, she succeeded. She is now a mindfulness facilitator for a K-12 school on the reservation. She is convinced that mind-body knowledge and skills will not only help break her family’s cycle of “diseases of despair” but also interrupt the toxic stress response in children across the reservation.

Irreducible Grace Foundation:
Providing youth with mind-body tools to self-regulate

Amos, a 21-year-old African-American man who works in an auto parts store, has experienced the power of self-awareness and self-regulation in his life. Thanks to the mind-body training he received through the Irreducible Grace Foundation, a Catalyst grantee, he understands how his “reptile brain” can hijack his wiser prefrontal cortex. He also knows that he has a choice about which part of his brain to listen to.

TOTAL CATALYST INITIATIVE FOR 2017:
$408,772*

*This amount includes grants to the Minnesota Indian Women’s Resource Center & The Minneapolis Foundation.
This knowledge has changed his life for the better. When his boss intentionally called him by a different name, Amos was aggravated but realized he could lose his job if he overreacted. Tapping into his training, he took a deep breath, and then another. Then he calmly told his boss that it made him feel bad and asked him to please call him by his rightful name. His boss did – and treated Amos with more respect after that.

Amos is one of the youth leaders from Irreducible Grace Foundation. So far, they have taught 925 law enforcement officers and other community members how to self-regulate using mind-body practices. These young leaders have not only designed and led all of the workshops but are also partnering with four other Catalyst grantees in the Youth Healing Justice Network to expand their reach.

Islamic Mind-Body Toolkit: Aligning mind-body and Islamic teachings to combat stress

With Catalyst’s help, Imam Sharif Mohamed is capitalizing on the power of faith leadership to improve the health of the Somali community and build interfaith connections.

He began by gathering a group of community members to learn about mind-body practices and to discuss how they could be aligned with Islamic teachings. Through the Dar Al-Hijrah mosque and working with the nearby Trinity Lutheran Church, these practices are being widely disseminated to combat chronic stress in the Somali-American immigrant community.

Imam Sharif is the first Somali-American, and the only chaplain in Minnesota, to be certified as a trainer with the Center for Mind-Body Medicine in Washington, D.C.

We believe that empowering communities to “heal from within” can become the national model for resilience and healing an unhealthy America – with Minnesota leading the way.
Envisioning the Future

Following our May announcement, two visioning sessions in the fall – one with community members closely connected to Catalyst and one with leaders from both foundations and the Catalyst Initiative Advisory Cabinet – helped us arrive at an aspirational purpose statement, target population, high-level strategies, and both short- and long-term outcomes.

We determined that Catalyst would continue to “honor and foster culturally authentic self-care practices to advance health and wellbeing. The target population is people and communities most in need of investment including people experiencing current and/or historical trauma, toxic stress, inequities or lack of access to opportunities.”

In December, the George Family Foundation approved a three-year, $1.5 million grant to provide anchor support for the operations and programs of the Catalyst Initiative at The Minneapolis Foundation. Already, other national and regional funders have indicated interest in funding current and future Catalyst projects and grantees.

We are proud of Catalyst’s role in helping individuals realize their innate power to heal and be well. By taking strategic risks to improve health in Minnesota, the George Family Foundation has led a movement – a true example of social venture philanthropy – that we’re confident will continue to grow at The Minneapolis Foundation.

Café Momentum CEO and founder Chad Houser teaches interns to cook before dinner service. Café Momentum is a nonprofit restaurant that provides a 12-month paid post-release internship program for kids coming out of juvenile detention. Interns work their way through all areas of the restaurant, learning employment, social and life skills.

Every night before the Café Momentum restaurant opens, the staff sits down with the interns to have a family meal.

Two decades of transforming health care with self care

Two decades of transforming health care with self care

For the past 23 years, the Foundation has been seeking to make an impact in changing the state of health and health care in four distinct ways.

ADVANCING WORK AT THE LOCAL LEVEL

In 2014, the Foundation began a three-year, $3.25 million Catalyst Initiative to fund culturally significant healing practices at the grassroots level. Catalyst grew out of our core belief in the innate healing capacity of individuals and communities. As Catalyst’s work and community connections grew, we saw more robust adoption of mind-body practices, especially in communities that have experienced high levels of trauma.

After more than three years of incubating innovative community-led, culturally informed programs for people with the highest health disparities, we knew that for Catalyst to grow, it needed to move out of our private family foundation to another entity better suited to build staff capacity and raise funds from others.

Fortunately, The Minneapolis Foundation stepped forward to embrace Catalyst and integrate it into their health and community-building efforts. To facilitate this shift, the George Family Foundation made a $1.5 million grant to The Minneapolis Foundation to support the transfer of Catalyst, providing administrative and convening support as it seeks to attract new funding sources for programs and seed grants.

CO-FOUNDED THE LARGEST INTEGRATIVE MEDICINE PROGRAM IN THE U.S.

In 2003, with support from the Foundation, Penny George co-founded the Penny George Institute for Health and Healing at Allina Health, one of the largest health care systems in the upper Midwest. What began as a single offering at one tertiary care hospital has now spread across the entire Allina Health system. Today it is the largest integrative health and healing program within a health care system in the country. Furthermore, the success experienced by Allina Health through their integrative medicine programs has encouraged others across the state to launch their own integrative medicine programs. In 2017, the Foundation continued its longstanding support of the Institute.
FORGING A NEW PARTNERSHIP WITH THE YMCA,
A LEADING COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION

At the end of 2017, the George Family Foundation and Penny and Bill George made a combined $2.5 million gift to support the George Wellbeing Center at the new Dayton YMCA in downtown Minneapolis, the first such center at any YMCA location in the United States.

In addition to the financial gift, Penny George provided advice and support to the YMCA staff, drawing on her years of expertise in the integrative health and healing field. The George Wellbeing Center will connect individuals with evidence-based, integrative health and healing practices (IHH) shown to reduce stress, promote healing and improve health outcomes. Beyond wellness, wellbeing incorporates other dimensions often undervalued in health care, such as meaning and purpose, joy and generosity, healthy relationships and strong connections to community.

The George Wellbeing Center at the YMCA will bring wellness techniques and resources to people outside of the traditional health care system who might not otherwise have access to them. The Center will support people as they take charge of their health through accessible, affordable tools and practices.

The George Wellbeing Center also will provide a home venue to the YMCA’s pioneering Healthy Living Program for holistic wellbeing, leveraging existing community partnerships to link services for underserved populations. Culturally based healing practices, supported by the work of the Catalyst Initiative of The Minneapolis Foundation, will be integrated into the program to better serve diverse populations in the Twin Cities area.

Glen Gunderson, president and CEO of the YMCA of the Greater Twin Cities, says that the program will serve as a model and initial testing ground for other YMCAs in the area, as well as nationally. Since the YMCA of the Greater Twin Cities is leading the national YMCA’s innovation efforts, it is expected that much of the successful programming developed and offered at the George Wellbeing Center will spread to YMCAs across the country.
BEYOND BRAVEWELL: CONTINUING WORK AT THE NATIONAL LEVEL

In addition to spearheading the new initiative at the YMCA, the Foundation continues its longstanding commitment to advance initiatives at the national level.

Over the past year, the Foundation funded efforts to share research supporting integrative health and medicine philosophies and practices. A grant to the Academy of Medicine at the National Institutes of Health will begin an international discussion on how integrative health and medicine practices can reduce rates of health care practitioner burnout and suicide. Other grants will support integrative medicine access to underserved communities and offer integrative medicine training to practitioners in Twin Cities’ community clinics.

In 2002, Penny George co-founded and served as the first president of the Bravewell Collaborative, an innovative national integrative medicine initiative composed of philanthropists and integrative medicine practitioners with the potential to leverage systemic change. Though it began with a single conversation between philanthropists and medical professionals, its influence and activities grew dramatically.

With its principal strategies achieved and integrative medicine now part of the national conversation in health care and beyond, Bravewell sunset in 2015, just as the founders had intended. For more information about Bravewell, go to www.bravewell.org.

At the end of 2017, the George Family Foundation’s 23-year overall investment in integrative health & medicine stood at nearly $23 million. In addition to the Foundation’s financial support, our board and staff continue our work to strengthen the field through our service on advisory committees and participation in national conferences and convenings with the nation’s leading integrative health and medical organizations.
